

Winston-Salem Journal Features ACSH On Smoking Cessation

By ACSH Staff — November 12, 2014

Winston-Salem Journal journalist Richard Craver consults American Council on Science and Health Senior Director of Medicine and Public Health Dr. Gil Ross on harm reduction.

"Dr. Gilbert Ross, medical and executive director of the American Council on Science and Health, said a GOP-controlled Congress could use its "bully pulpit" to try to bend the debate toward considering alternative tobacco products for their potential reduced risk role for public health. Perhaps the new Congress can rein in the anti-science mythology of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the FDA on the topic of tobacco harm reduction," Ross said.
